president's message

It is human nature to make natural and inevitable events momentous. The turn of the century is just such an event. The hope, and indeed need, for a future is powerful. But on what can such hope be realistically based if not on who we are and who we have been? Lebanon Valley College has reason to celebrate the future and the accomplishments of the 1998-1999 academic year.

It has been a great pleasure and source of satisfaction for Janice and I to have witnessed the efforts of the LVC family over the recent years. And truly, patterns are much more impressive than the accomplishments of a single year. But patterns are established a year at a time—and last year certainly made its contribution to the continuum. In the pages ahead, several members of our community are highlighted. They excellently represent the widespread work of a dedicated community.

During the long and storied history of the Valley we see a community powerfully committed to learning. And today, as always, we remain a community dedicated to the greater good of a civilized nation. We are family and friends donating time and energy to help ensure a student's individual success. We are alumni, staff and faculty providing advice, producing scholarship and creating opportunity. We are students studying by a pond in the Peace Garden or before the Elgin Marbles in London—praying for the achievement of an "A" on the next exam. And above all, we are a community of learners.

The recent addition of new programs and the continued aesthetic development of our beautiful campus have allowed us to continue the growth and quality we have enjoyed throughout the 90s. In the last two years alone applications have increased by 43 percent, with a continued increase anticipated for the year ahead. Significantly, the percentage of students from the top 10 percent of their high school classes continues to rise in the midst of our growth. The college is moving ahead with thoughtful deliberation. Nothing has been compromised.

Needless to say, our accomplishments have drawn more than their share of public attention—not only locally, but regionally and nationally as well. The name of Lebanon Valley College continues to be spread by our alumni and friends and through our new academic ventures. Consistently, we are spoken of in terms of quality, value, and the safety and beauty of our campus.

All that we do rests on the academic integrity and quality of our institution. U.S. News and World Report ranks the Valley sixth among the list of top regional liberal arts colleges in the north in terms of academic quality. This, too, is part of a pattern of recognition, going from 12th, to 10th, to 8th, to 6th over three years.

Under the heading of "Great Colleges at Great Prices," Lebanon Valley College again was recognized by U.S. News and World Report, this time as fourth among the northern liberal arts colleges as a "best value"—the marriage of quality and value. Here the Board of Trustees and staff of the college should be rightfully proud of their skill and pattern of good judgement.

Finally, in the first national safety study of its kind, APBnews.com and CAP Index, Inc. have recognized Lebanon Valley College as 11th nationally, out of approximately 1500 campus neighborhoods, for providing a community that is safe and secure for its students.

Quality, Value, Safety, Beauty. On what is our hope for the next century to be based? Need we ask? On the path that has brought us to this new century. And most importantly, my friends, on the people and substance of the present. For it is they who will begin to answer the questions of the next 100 years.

G. David Pollick
President, Lebanon Valley College

The college's expanded athletic complex includes a new award-winning soccer stadium.

Fiscal year 1998-99 was an exciting time in Lebanon Valley College history. National recognitions carried the college's name and reputation for excellence across the country, while a host of cultural events and educational outreaches brought the community to our door. Expansion of the campus physical plant continued with the development of a new residence hall and physical therapy center, facilities which will provide an atmosphere of living and learning for many generations to come.

Recognitions

U.S. News and World Report's 12th Annual "America's Best Colleges" issue ranked LVC number six among the list of top 10 regional liberal arts colleges in the North. The college jumped up two steps from the previous year's eighth place ranking.

The National Science Foundation awarded a $73,000 research grant to Dr. Carl Wigal, associate professor of chemistry, for his research to investigate new methodology aimed at the synthesis of quinone derivatives. Quinones, naturally occurring compounds found in all living systems, are essential to cellular respiration, photosynthesis and blood coagulation.

Woodrow Wilson Visiting Fellows program brought to campus William Reese, chief operating officer of the International Youth Foundation. Reese spent a week with students and faculty discussing his work with the Peace Corps and Latin American affairs and development issues.

Lebanon Valley received a $650,000 challenge grant from the Kresge Foundation to complete the Heilman Physical Therapy Center and Endowment Campaign.

Lebanon Valley received a $650,000 challenge grant from the Kresge Foundation to complete the Heilman Physical Therapy Center and Endowment Campaign.

Lancaster Health Alliance awarded the college a $500,000 Challenge Gift in support of the Heilman Physical Therapy Center and Endowment Campaign. Good Samaritan Hospital provided an additional $500,000 in response to the challenge component.

The college's Molecular Modeling website was recognized by ChemCenter, the umbrella site of the American Chemical Society. The site was developed and maintained by the Chemistry Department. LVC was in good company, as the listing featured prominent sites as the Nobel Foundation, the Smithsonian Institution, the Discovery Channel and the NASA Homepage.

Part of the new athletic complex, McGill Baseball Field welcomed its first season of play.

Currently nearing completion, the Heilman Center has already received an AIA Merit Award.

The Josiah W. and Bessie H. Kline Foundation of Harrisburg, Pa., provided the college with a $250,000 grant in support of the Heilman Physical Therapy Center and Endowment Campaign.

The Peace Garden garnered an award for the firm which built it — Bilran Excavating, a business unit of the Horst Group in Lancaster. The Keystone Chapter of the Associated Builders and Contractors presented Bilran executives with an Award of Merit for the garden. With its arching red cedar entrance arbor, meticulous landscaping, flagstone patio, and babbling brook and waterfall, the garden continues to be a place of quiet contemplation for students.

The music recording technology department established a partnership with Tascam which placed $40,000 worth of equipment in the MRT department and arranged internship opportunities for LVC students. The partnership enables students to work on state-of-the-art equipment and gives them the opportunity to gain invaluable on-the-job experience with Tascam. Tascam is a 25-year-old international company, a pro audio division of TEAC in Japan with U.S. headquarters in Los Angeles.

Hallmark Dining Services was included in Foodservice Director magazine's performance report for the 50 Top College Contractors. The honor recognized Hallmark, which joined LVC in 1989, for its fiscally responsible, top-quality program. During 1998, the staff served over 545,000 meals to LVC students. The only other Pennsylvania colleges to make the list were Grove City College, Lehigh University and the University of Pittsburgh.

The Josiah W. and Bessie H. Kline Foundation of Harrisburg, Pa., provided the college with a $250,000 grant in support of the Heilman Physical Therapy Center and Endowment Campaign.

New Construction

It was a year of evolution for the college's physical plant. Ground was broken for the Heilman Center, the physical therapy (PT) program's home base. The 36,000-square-foot center boasts a sleek, contemporary design. The interior features a wellness pool where PT students will undergo aquatics education; two 2,500-square-foot classroom/laboratory suites featuring state-of-the-art audio/visual equipment; a 1,000-square-foot resource/research center with computer terminals and library facilities; a conference room, offices and space for five classrooms.

In order to accommodate the college's increasing enrollment, ground was also broken for a new residence hall. The three-story building features 14 suites, each consisting of two single rooms, one double room, a study and a bathroom. The first and second floors also contain a kitchen area and a lounge/lobby. The partial basement houses laundry facilities and storage areas. In a special homecoming weekend ceremony, the new residence hall was named in honor of Dr. George R. Marquette '48, a long-time member of the LVC community.

Finishing touches were made to the new athletic complex, as the McGill Baseball Field welcomed its first season of play. Campus also welcomed feathered friends Bob and Judy, a pair of Australian black swans. The couple have made their home on the scenic lake area on the north end of campus.

Traditions

The 1999 Founders Day celebration honored Miles J. Gibbons Jr., J.D., chief executive officer and president of The Whitaker Foundation. Upon receiving the award, Gibbons paid tribute to Miles Rigor and Thomas Rhys Vickroy, founders of Lebanon Valley College, adding, "In my opinion, it is founders of all types who are the backbone of this country."

Dr. Barney Raffield, professor of business administration, was chosen by students as recipient of the Student Government Award.

In addition, the President's Award, recognizing student organizations which contribute to the mission of the college and demonstrate vision, informed decision-making and preparation for a life of service to others, was presented to the International Student Organization.

The 29th annual Spring Arts Festival brought campus and community together for a variety of musical offerings, craft show, art exhibitions and the return of the AIDS Memorial Quilt. For the first time in years, Alumni Weekend was held separately from the arts festival. The May weekend celebration was a huge success. Alumni returned to their alma mater for the annual golf tournament, dedication of McGill Baseball Field, a variety of educational offerings, a Caribbean cruise dinner dance and a champagne brunch.

Cultural Events

The 1998 Fall Perspectives Series, cyberwhat.lvc.edu, drew campus into the realm of cyberspace to explore the growing popularity of the Internet and the increasing importance of technology in our society. The 1999 Spring Humanities Colloquium, "Race Realities," brought racial issues close to home with a look at stereotypes and prejudices. This thought-provoking colloquium was so well received by the community that it garnered the Andrew E. Murray Peacemaking Award from the Synod of the Trinity, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Other cultural highlights for the year included a concert by the Cypress String Quartet, a fiction reading by author Carolyn Farrington, art exhibitions of Winslow Homer, Robert Arneson and George Inness, and the outrageous comedy of Second City Touring Company. Professor David Hawkins, Los Alamos project historian, mesmerized students, faculty and community alike as he relayed his experiences as Robert Oppenheimer's assistant and his involvement with the atom bomb.

Reaching Out

- The 19th Annual Quiz Bowl, the largest of its kind in the state, brought over 700 of the brightest students from 69 high schools throughout southcentral and southeastern Pennsylvania to campus. All questions for the Quiz

The Peace Garden garnered an award of merit for the firm which built it — Bilran Excavating, a business unit of the Horst Group in Lancaster.

- Some 120 seventh- through ninth-grade girls from three counties participated in Lebanon Valley College's first Women in Science Day. The program introduced young women to the fun, challenging and exciting aspects of scientific discovery through hands-on experimentation. Workshops focused on forensic science, psychological methods, the biology of leaves and the principles of physics.

- The annual Business Career Day brought over 300 students from 20 area high schools throughout central Pennsylvania. The day featured a variety of seminars presented by area business leaders. The sessions covered subjects such as human resource management, marketing and sales, hotel management, banking, international business and business applications on the Internet.

Bowl were written by LVC staff and faculty, with members of the college community serving as judges and moderators throughout the day-long event.

- More than 700 students from 27 area high schools participated in International Culture Day. The program, "Unity in Cyberspace," gave students enrolled in higher-level French, German and Spanish classes an opportunity to speak the language and learn more about that country's culture.

Dr. Barney Raffield, professor of business administration, was chosen by students as recipient of the Student Government Award.

A Community of Caring

Generosity and concern for others has always been near the heart of LVC's community. Campus members reached out to distant neighbors by gathering hundreds of books for children in Jamaica and donating care packages for refugees in Kosovo. Other acts of kindness hit closer to home:

- Monetary gifts to the United Way exceeded $7,000.
- The 1998 Achievement Challenge Golf Tournament brought in $60,000. Over the course of nine years the tournament has raised more than $380,000. The funds, donated by Lebanon County businesses and friends of the college, enable youth in the Lebanon School District to see a college education as more than just a dream.
- Volunteers from campus made the holidays a little brighter for economically disadvantaged residents of Lebanon who partake of the county's noon meal program. In addition to preparing and serving the meal, an LVC Santa Claus and elf distributed gifts donated by campus members as well as homemade Christmas cookies.
- LVC students participated in the College Challenge, a blood drive sponsored by the Central PA Blood Bank and WHP-TV 21 in Harrisburg. Pitted against Millersville, Elizabethtown, Dickinson College, Dickinson School of Law, Harrisburg Area Community College and Penn State's Harrisburg campus, our students stepped up to the challenge, and received a trophy for having the second highest percentage of participation.

It was a banner year in development with over $6,339,173 committed in support of new campus initiatives, including $4,317,116 received in outright gifts.

a community of philanthropy

Only once in Anne Brossman Sweigart's life did she ever consider leaving her community behind. "I had just graduated from Rider College," Sweigart, an honorary LVC trustee, explains. "I had a job interview in New York, but on graduation day my parents informed me I was going home to Ephrata. I was disappointed at the time because I had grand ideas about working in a big city, but I've never regretted that I didn't go. This community has been a major part of my life."

And Sweigart, her family and their company, D&E Communications, have been a major part of the community. Her late father, William F. Brossman, founded the company as Denver and Ephrata Telephone and Telegraph Co. in 1911 with 100 customers. Today D&E offers a wide range of communications services to over 100,000 customers in the central Pennsylvania region.

Sweigart, president, chairman and CEO of the firm, has been a part of the company for 63 years. Her sister, Bertha Brossman Blair (for whom LVC's Blair Music Center is named), spent 72 years there. She was the CEO at the time of her death in 1985.

Despite her busy work schedule, Sweigart also finds time to play a very active role in the community as both a philanthropist and a member and leader in a variety of organizations. She has been on the board of the Ephrata Community Hospital for 40 years, is a charter member and former president of Soroptimists International, a past president of the American Legion Auxiliary (Unit 429), a board member and past secretary for the Guy K. Bard Educational Fund, past president of the Ephrata Women's Club, and is active in Holy Trinity Evangelical Lutheran Church.

"I'm very proud of the theaters we gave to the community," she states. "When I was growing up, we had two theaters in town and one was an especially beautiful theater — the old Ephrata Main Theater. I went to its opening in 1938. However, through the years it was allowed to deteriorate and was in terrible condition, so D&E bought it, demolished it, and built a complex with two beautiful new theaters in its place."

Sweigart has also been involved with educational institutions in central Pennsylvania, including Lebanon Valley College. "It's important that students in this region have access to good schools," she states. "My family has always been very supportive of local education."

"In general," she adds, "my family and I have believed in investing in and supporting the community as much as possible. I was born nearby, I grew up here, and I've never lived anywhere else except for my years at college. The community has given a lot to me, and I want to give back in every way I can."

a community of pride

When you're building a community, there are always two main ingredients: The people and the places. Kevin Yeiser, Lebanon Valley's director of grounds and athletic facilities, is a large part of both.

"In the last few years, there's been a dramatic change on campus — and not just in the way it looks," says Yeiser. "You'll see students lounging around the Peace Garden, listening to music or reading a book or taking a nap. You'll see people strolling across the campus, or stopping to talk in Carmean Plaza. There are places all over campus where people can congregate and really feel comfortable."

Yeiser is the one responsible for this to a great degree, and it is a job that he takes seriously. "I guess you could say I'm in charge of everything outside the buildings," he explains. "That's the first thing anybody sees when they come to the college — visitors, prospective students, parents. They have to pass through the campus first, and first impressions are really important."

For Yeiser and his crew, the pièce de résistance is McGill Field, the newly constructed baseball stadium. Building it was an act of love, and seeing it now instills them with a sense of pride and accomplishment.

"It was something we had never done before, and we all learned together," says Yeiser, who grew up in Lebanon County and learned the lawn and garden business from his father Leon, who continues to tend the campus rose garden.

The baseball stadium — and the newly improved athletic fields — have changed the way Yeiser and his department view their job. "With a facility like that, it enhances the way you approach things — it gives you a feeling of professionalism. We all have a sense of pride in the facility we're able to work on. A lot of Division I teams would be envious of a facility like this."

Umpires who have worked games at McGill Field give it rave reviews. "One umpire who has called games at Camden Yards said that he enjoyed our stadium more," says Yeiser. "It's not so commercial — there are no distractions from the game." And it has drawn community members like a magnet. "Throughout the whole construction project, people from the community would just drive in to take a look at what we were doing," Yeiser recalls. Now, attendance is way up and the local high school students are using the stadium for special games. The new soccer fields are also used by Annville-Cleona High School, and community leagues have used the softball stadium during the summer months. "The resources are excellent," Yeiser says. "When the high school kids come in and use the baseball stadium, it may be the best facility they will ever play on — it will be something they'll always remember."

Kevin Yeiser

"When alumni come back and say they hardly recognize the place, or when we see a class being held in the Peace Garden, it feels great."

a community of educators

You never know where the seeds for a future vocation will be planted. For Kimberly Hillman Hughes '82, it sprang out of a really bad year. "I had a terrible first grade experience," she recalls. "I had a serious vision problem — but nobody knew that back then. The teacher didn't try to figure out what was wrong — all she did was humiliate me."

Little Kimberly started playing school and taking on the role of the "nice teacher." And by the next year, life started to look up. Her new eyeglasses opened up a whole new world, and her second-grade teacher was "the most kind and generous person ever. She made me want to be part of this wonderful community of teachers."

Several years later, that's what made choosing Lebanon Valley so easy. "Lebanon Valley offered me the opportunity to get right into the classroom my freshman year," she says — and from then on there was no stopping her.

"So many people helped me develop my profession," she says, looking back. "It was wonderful to be in environments that celebrated children, and to learn from teachers and mentors who were really inspiring. They helped mold me into the person I became."

And what she became was an amazing teacher whose career has taken her from substituting in Binghamton, New York, to directing a city-wide day-care program in Syracuse, to running a family literacy program in Rochester.

Hughes's program — sponsored by the National Literacy Foundation — caught the attention of teachers and policymakers around the world. She traveled the nation to give workshops on her teaching methods, and welcomed visitors to her classroom from over the globe — among them were Bill Clinton, Geraldine Ferraro and former British Prime Minister John Major.

Hughes and her family left Rochester for North Carolina in 1996 — her husband, Scott (LVC '81) is a team manager for IBM — and Hughes hardly missed a beat. She received the honor of teacher of the year in her school in 1997, and went through county and state competitions to be named North Carolina Teacher of the Year in May 1999.

Over the years, Hughes learned that the community of teachers she wanted to be a part of is much bigger than she ever imagined. Which brings her right back to Lebanon Valley. "The faculty there was amazing," she says. "They all had incredibly high expectations for us, and when the bar is raised, you can't help but be successful."

Kimberly Hillman Hughes '82

"They (LVC faculty) all had incredibly high expectations for us, and when the bar is raised, you can't help but be successful."

a community of involvement

Darwin Glick '58 fondly remembers the scholarship assistance he received from Lebanon Valley College as an undergraduate. "I would not have been able to attend Lebanon Valley without that scholarship help," he explains, "and I have always felt extremely indebted to the college for my education and for the opportunities it opened up for me. I believe much of what I've accomplished in the world is due to my Lebanon Valley education."

The scholarship redeemed by Glick — who has enjoyed a long, successful career as a certified public accountant — has been repaid many times over to Lebanon Valley College and to the Lebanon area community. Both he and his wife, Libby '58, have worked on various alumni and fund-raising activities (they chaired the Lebanon area segment of the Toward 2001 Campaign), and they are familiar faces at college events. He was elected to the college's Board of Trustees in 1989, and serves on both the Executive and Advancement Committees.

"We believe it is important to support the college in order to enable it to assist the next generation of students," he states. "We want to see the legacy continue."

A similar "esprit de corps" exists among others in the LVC alumni community, he observes. "I know that a number of people have the same feeling of indebtedness to the institution that I have. I would never like to feel that the account is balanced."

Glick's involvement extends into the greater Lebanon community as well. He is a past Chairman of the Board at Good Samaritan Hospital and has been a trustee since 1970, he is a past president of the United Way, the Lebanon County Sight Conservation Committee and the Lion's Club and is a life-long member of the Saint Andrews Presbyterian Church where he is also the treasurer and an elder. He takes pride in the college's contribution to the Annville and Lebanon community over the past few years.

"I see the college moving more and more into the community with programs like the Lebanon Valley Education Partnership program and other outreach projects," he states. "I put a high value on community involvement, and feel the college has a major role to play in improving the surrounding community."

Glick is proud of the college's many successes over the past decade. "There were some lean years prior to that, but even in lean times students were proud of the education they received here. Now I think all of us — including the alums from my era — are delighted about the progress the college has made, and we want to insure that it continues."

a community of openness

For Kim Saunders, community is a really big word. It brings together human beings from a few dozen countries and more religions, cultures and colors than she can count, and sets them down in a small town in Pennsylvania. And what happens when they get together — and pool their resources — is a very powerful thing. “When people begin to dispel all the misnomers and stereotypes they have,” says Saunders, LVC’s director of multicultural affairs, “it allows them to form a community where they can break down barriers and begin to learn.”

Saunders serves as adviser and advocate to the College’s 75 or so minority students, most of whom come here from foreign countries, helping them adjust to small-campus, small-town life. “Coming to college for the first time is a culture shock for anyone,” Saunders explains, “but it’s magnified when you’re talking about minority students coming here from Washington or New York or Philadelphia. We help them find a life outside of their schoolwork and show them that life in a college town isn’t necessarily reality — the challenge is to help everyone in the community share experiences with someone outside of themselves, someone who doesn’t look and talk just like you do. Otherwise, when you leave here, you’re going to have a very rude awakening.”

Saunders took up that challenge wholeheartedly in the spring semester of 1999, when she chaired the college-wide colloquium, “Race Realities,” a series of lectures, plays, films and art exhibits that encouraged the college community to look at race-related polarities and dispel the myths that went along with them.

From a screening of “The Color of Fear,” followed by a three-hour-long discussion led by David Lee, one of the film’s actors, to a performance by the Gospel Choir of Harlem, the college community had the chance to look at racism head-on and think about the ways it plays out in American life. “It allowed students to speak out about what they were thinking and opened their eyes to things that were happening around them,” Saunders explains. “Even in this conservative environment, it opened the doors to all types of things.”

Saunders and her fellow colloquium committee members were awarded the Andrew E. Murray Peacemaking Award from the Synod of the Trinity, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), in recognition of their efforts.

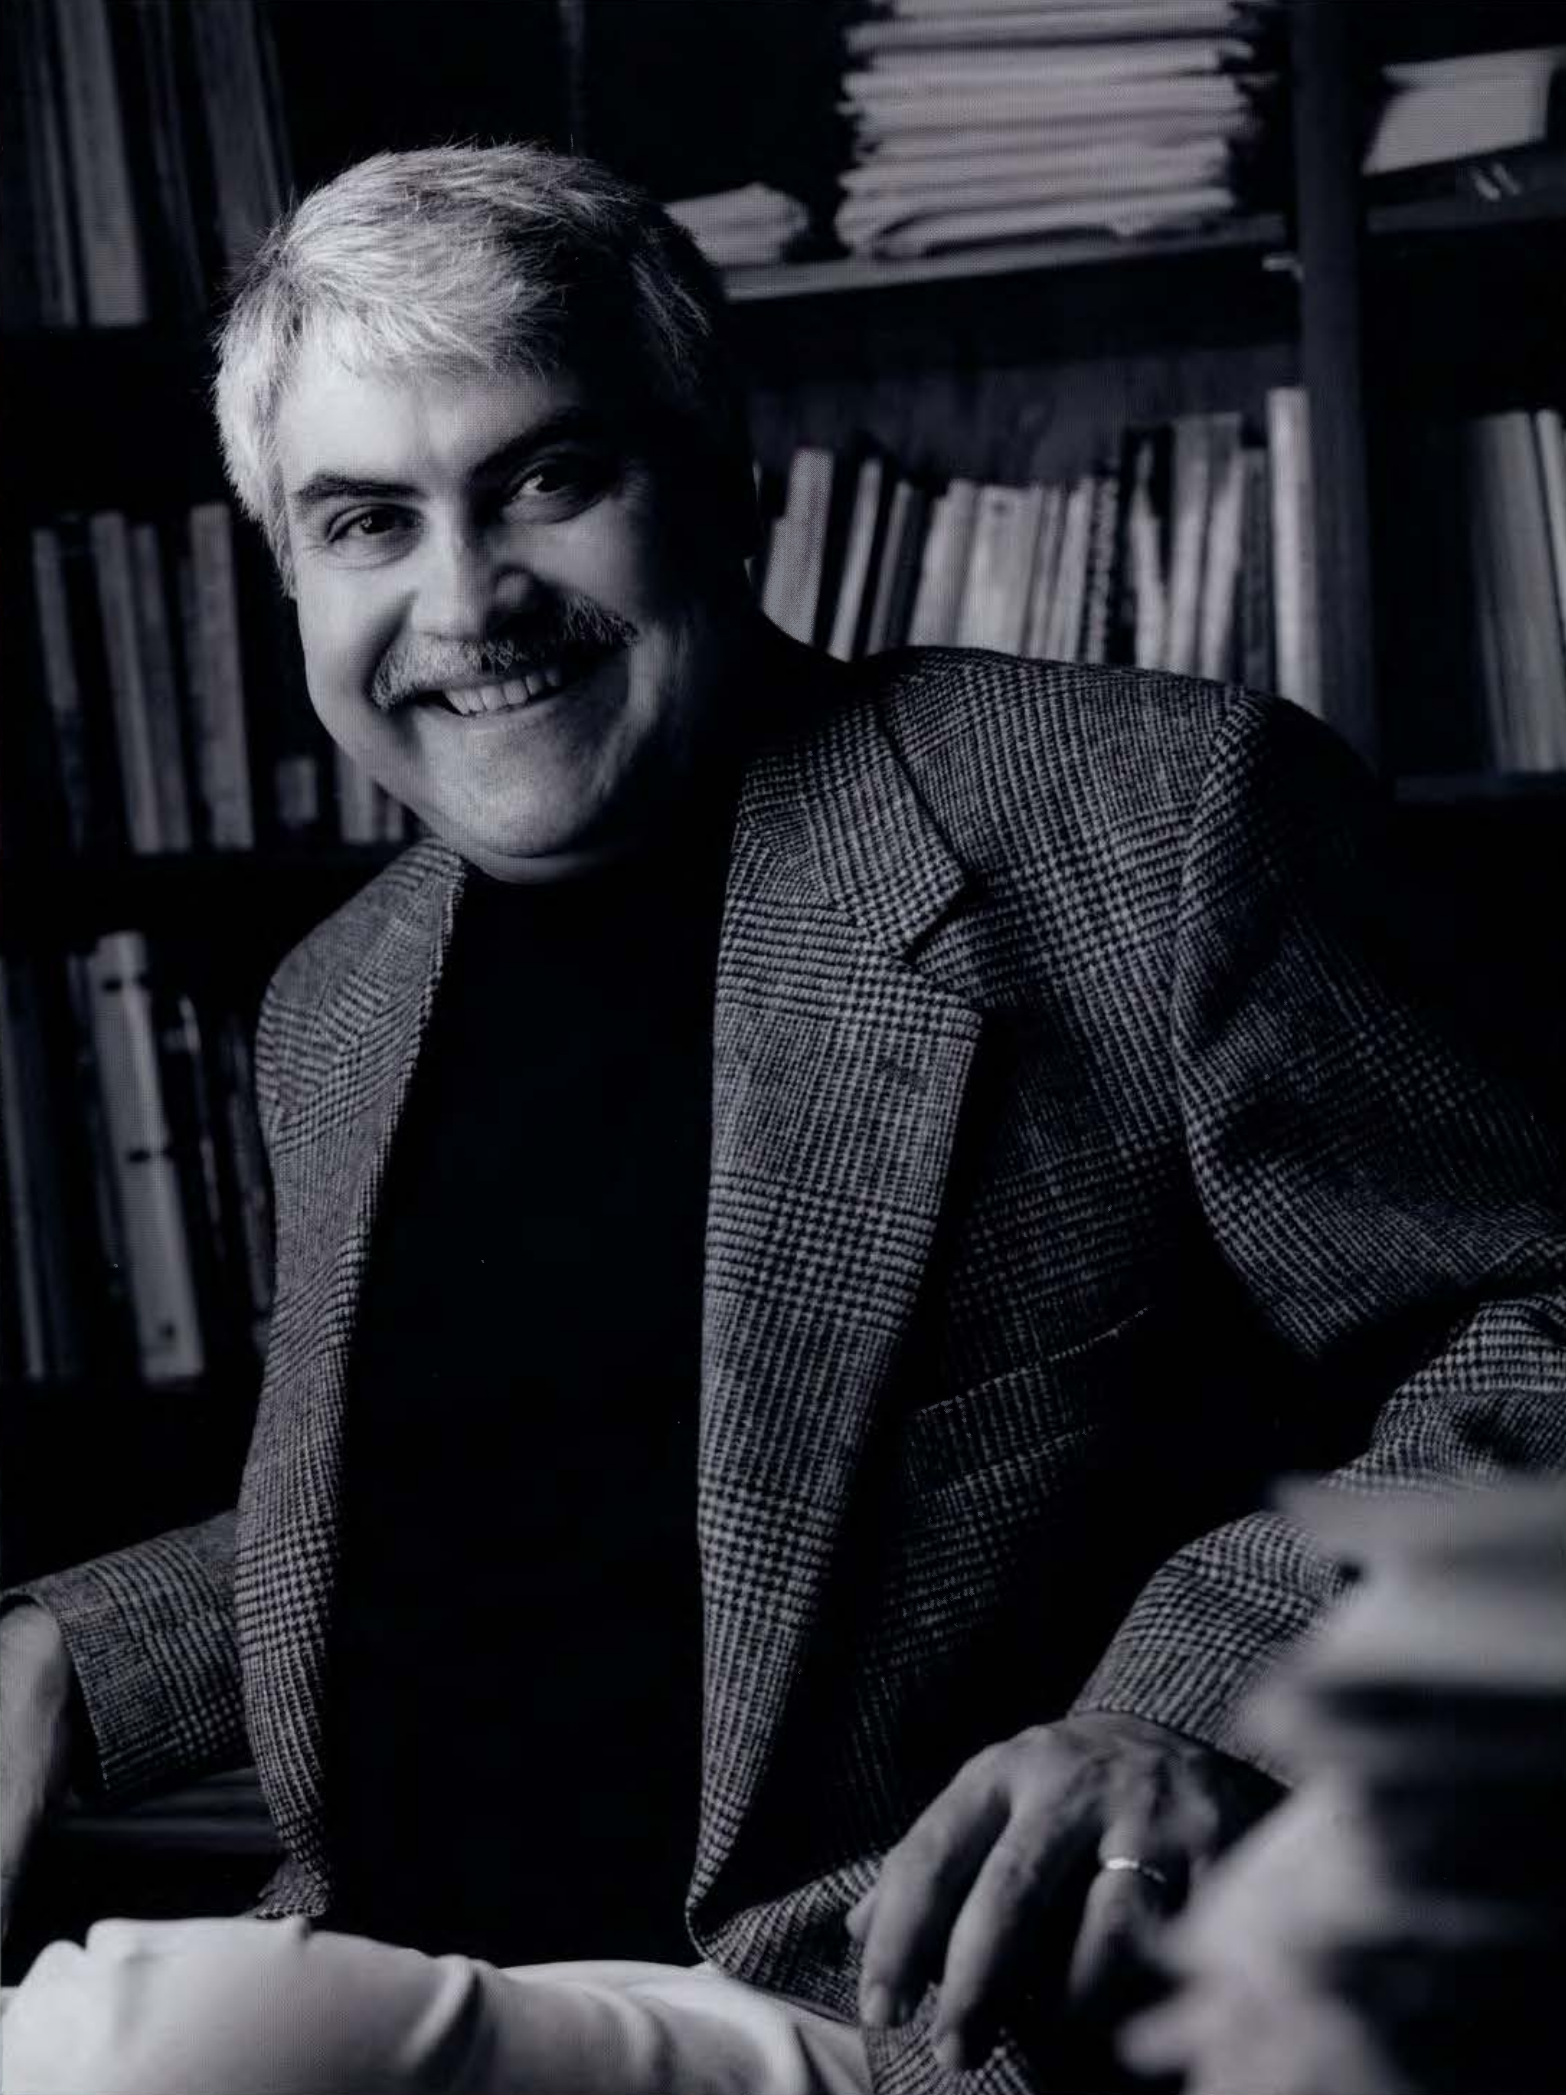

Race Realities, insists Saunders, “was an enriching experience. It forced people to look outside themselves and broaden their horizons. In a place like this, you wonder how controversial these topics would be, but people came in with open arms. It built a sense of community that — when you think about it — is really in keeping with our motto: The truth shall set you free.”

Kim Saunders

“When people begin to dispel all the misnomers and stereotypes they have, it allows them to form a community where they can break down barriers and begin to learn.”

a community of friends

To Dr. Salvatore Cullari, Lebanon Valley College "is almost like a family reunion. Everybody is out doing their own thing, but when we get together, it's really close and friendly. People genuinely care about each other."

Relationships between faculty and students are particularly close, according to Cullari — both in and outside the classroom. It's not just that we work on research together," he states. "There's a whole social dimension. Our students call us at home, they babysit for us, they share their dreams and their problems. And the relationship doesn't end when they graduate. Virtually every week alums drop by to tell us how they're doing in their careers, who they're marrying, and how many kids they have. For many of them, Lebanon Valley is a prominent part of their lives."

Cullari, chair of the Psychology Department, joined the college in 1985 as a part-time adjunct. A year later, he became a full-time faculty member and now teaches abnormal psychology, introduction to clinical psychology, and testing and assessment.

A respected clinical psychologist, Cullari for a number of years consulted at Harrisburg State Hospital where he helped run a unique program for schizophrenic patients which matched them with volunteer friends from the community. The program not only brightened the patients' day-to-day lives, but also resulted in considerable improvement in their condition — some to the point that they were able to leave the hospital and re-enter society.

He has published a number of articles in professional journals and two books — Foundations of Clinical Psychology and Treatment Resistance: A Guide for Practitioners — and is working on a third, Counseling and Psychotherapy: A Practical Handbook, due out in 2000 or 2001.

Cullari is particularly proud of his accomplishments because he comes from an Italian immigrant family, who arrived in the U.S. in 1955 from Calabria, Italy when he was four years old.

"It was tough for us," he recalls. "My father didn't speak English and wasn't educated. He started with menial jobs, then worked in factories or at whatever jobs he could get. We struggled — we were poor."

Cullari has not forgotten where he came from. Last year he set up the Carmelo Cullari Scholarship Fund in honor of his father. He donates money from his paycheck each month to the fund which will provide scholarships to Lebanon Valley students who are born outside the U.S. but who are naturalized citizens.

"I wanted to set up something for immigrant students like myself who were born and raised in a different country," he states. "My family and I struggled, and now I want to help others succeed. I'm a product of the American Dream."

Salvatore Cullari

"There's a whole social dimension. Our students call us at home, they babysit for us, they share their dreams and their problems."

a community of learning

The athletic community at Lebanon Valley College is one of the strongest that a visitor will find on campus. Bound together by the rigors of their sport and the time requirements necessary to excel on the field, the student-athletes are hard-working, committed and brimming with energy. In the center of that community you will find Serenity Roos '00.

Roos, an elementary education major from Pottsville, Pennsylvania, began thinking about Lebanon Valley as a high school senior. "I came down for a visit," Roos recalls, "and I made my decision after two hours on campus. Everyone was really nice, and I liked everything about the campus." But she admits that the deciding factor was this: At Lebanon Valley, she would be able to play more than one sport.

The indefatigable Roos has spent three and a half years taking advantage of that opportunity by playing a trio of varsity sports: soccer, basketball and softball.

But it is in basketball that Roos really shines. As a guard, Roos is a team star, looking forward to her final season at the Valley and hoping for a repeat of last year's fabulous finish. Under the direction of Coach Peg Kauffman, the Dutchwomen finished with 14 wins. "We made the MAC (Middle Atlantic Conference) playoffs for the first time in school history," Roos explains, "and that was an awesome experience to be a part of."

Roos has never been one to limit her conquests to the basketball court. She's a dynamo in the classroom as well, maintaining a near-perfect 3.9 GPA.

"For the past three years, I've had to get here before classes start for soccer, which leads right into basketball season. And the end of softball season is always somewhere around the end of the school year. So I'm always going — and I've learned to be really organized."

Winning is always a thrill, but for Roos, the best part of athletics is just playing the game and being part of the team. "You learn how it is to work with other people to reach a goal."

Roos, now a student teacher at Cedar Crest Middle School, is in charge of a team of sixth graders and well on the way to reaching her own goals. She credits her experience at Lebanon Valley with helping her get started. "What I really like about Lebanon Valley is the sense of community you find here," she says. "I see the example of my professors and my coaches — how they live and what they're doing in their lives. They're so willing to help and give advice, and they're always generous with their time. My goal is to follow their example, to always have extra time to help a student who needs it. I want to do as I've been shown."

The Thomas Rhys Vickroy Society

1998-1999 HONOR ROLL

Alumni and other friends who are members of the Vickroy Society demonstrate outstanding leadership in support of Lebanon Valley College. Through the dedication of Vickroy Society members, the strength of Lebanon Valley College continues to grow. It is with heartfelt thanks that we list their names below. Membership in the Vickroy Society is open to alumni, parents of students, parents of graduates and other friends of the college on an annual basis, renewable each year. The Society recognizes gifts of $1,000 and above given to the college for any purpose during each academic year. Graduates of the last decade (1990-1999) are encouraged to become members of the Vickroy Society with a gift of $500.

Memberships are available in the following categories:

- TRUSTEE ASSOCIATE: A gift of $10,000 and above
 FIVE FOUNDERS CIRCLE: A gift of $5,000 to $9,999
 PRESIDENT'S CIRCLE: A gift of $2,500 to $4,999
 SOCIETY ASSOCIATE: A gift of $1,000 to $2,499

Active memberships may be fulfilled with gifts of cash, securities, real estate or other property.

Lifetime Vickroy Associates are members whose cumulative contributions to Lebanon Valley College total $100,000 and above. Annual and Lifetime Vickroy Society memberships may be held concurrently.

Note: This Honor Roll recognizes Vickroy Society members whose gifts were made during the academic year July 1, 1998 through June 30, 1999, and includes both annual and capital gifts.

The Honors Society

The Honors Society of Lebanon Valley College was established on March 15, 1987 to recognize alumni and friends who have planned for the future by naming the college in their will as a beneficiary for $10,000 or more; or by purchasing a charitable gift annuity, establishing a charitable remainder trust, or making gifts of real estate or insurance policies to the college. This group has pledged over $5,000,000 for future buildings, scholarships and endowment to assure the well-being of Lebanon Valley College.

✦ Lebanon Valley Education Partnership

The Lebanon Valley Education Partnership is a program carried out with the Lebanon School District that encourages young people to consider attending college. The three-part program familiarizes students with the college environment, identifies those qualified to pursue a college education and provides scholarship funds if they should choose Lebanon Valley.

Each September for the past nine years, friends of the college and representatives from local businesses have participated in a golf outing at the Lebanon Country Club. The Achievement Challenge Tournament has raised over $380,000 for scholarship assistance. Donors to the partnership include:
